IF I SUSPECT CROOKEDNESS I'LL CALL OFF THE FIGHT---JEFFRIES

BY JAMES J. JEFFRIES.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 9.—I have accepted the offer of $1,000 to referee the contest between Britt and Nelson, and I will be the third man in the ring, and that is all there is to it. I understand that Nolan fears that Nelson will not get a square deal. But the public has demanded that I officiate, knowing full well that I will give both sides a square deal. If I suspect that the least bit of crookedness is going on, I will call the fight off in an instant.

WOMAN EATS GLASS: HAS INDIGESTION

Fashionably Dressed "Jane Jones" Puzzles Doctors at Relief Station.

Enshrouded in a veil of mystery, woven about her by the officials of the Relief Hospital, a beautiful and fashionably dressed woman lies at that institution in a serious condition, her case being diagnosed as "indigestion from eating glass."

At the Hotel Bellevue, from whence she was taken to the hospital, she registered as Mrs. J. M. Lyons of Denver, Col., but at the Relief Hospital the registration slip of her case bears the name of "Jane Jones." The hospital authorities refuse to either confirm or deny the charge of intoxication against the woman.

Goes Alone to Hotel.

She registered at the Bellevue at 8 o'clock last night and was assigned to a room on the second floor. She was unaccompanied. According to the clerk who was on duty at the time, there was no evidence of intoxication about her when she entered the hotel, but she had not been in her room long when she showed signs of it, and before midnight had become so boisterous that the hostelry was in an uproar.

She is a handsome woman, fashionably dressed, wearing expensive jewelry, and bearing every evidence of wealth and refinement. Whether the name signed on the hotel register as well as that given at the hospital is fictitious is a matter of conjecture.

No Address Given.

The slip given besides the name, undoubtedly fictitious, her age, which is set down as thirty-five, and the time of admittance, which was 2:20 a. m. The diagnosis on the slip is as stated above. Following the usual custom at the institution, there is no address given, nor the address of any friend. The spaces set apart for this data are left blank.

At the Hotel Bellevue Manager Harvey was almost equally reluctant to discuss the case, but said that he removed the woman from the hotel and sent her to the hospital because she was very much intoxicated and was creating a disturbance at the hotel. According to Manager Harvey, she threw the whole hotel into an uproar by her antics, and he was obliged to remove her. The hospital authorities refuse to either confirm or deny the charge of intoxication against the woman.

HUB MAN ENDS CHICAGO FRAUD

Two fraudulent matrimonial bureaus in Chicago have been raided and broken up through a tip furnished the Chicago police by Thomas H. Bates of No. 23 Munroe street, Roxbury.

He saw two suspicious advertisements in a Boston paper, one signed by a woman, saying that a woman with a fortune of $50,000 desired to correspond with a man. In another column he saw an ad., signed by a man, but giving the same address, in which the advertiser wished to correspond with a woman of wealth.

Bates forwarded the ads. to Chief Collins, who looked the matter up and arrested John S. Harris, editor of the Chicago Pilot, and Mrs. Emily Schultz of No. 3,150 Calumet avenue, Chicago, charged with running a fake matrimonial bureau.

SENATOR LODGE TO SOUND NOTE OF CAMPAIGN

Grand Feast of Middlesex Club at Hull To-day to Boom Republican State Politics.

The grand feast and powwow of the Middlesex Club takes place this afternoon at the Hotel Pemberton, Hull. All of the big guns of the party will be there, including the candidates for Governor, the three candidates for Lieutenant-Governor and the six contestants for the attorney-generalship. Over 400 tickets have been issued for the occasion.

The principal speech will be made by Senator Lodge, and it will be the keynote of the coming Republican campaign. The senior senator will outline the policy that the State machine desires to have followed in the fight to regain the office of Governor, and what issues should be discussed. One whole section of the speech deals with the rapid advancement of the United States, as a great world power under the guidance of President Roosevelt and explains how our foreign relations have improved in the last few years.

Lieutenant-Governor Guild will make the other long speech, and the candidates for the attorney-generalship are allowed five minutes each in which to charm the audience. Before the dinner and the speechmaking the various candidates are to have receptions on the broad verands of the hotel.

LOVESICK GIRL SHOT HERSELF

FALL RIVER, Sept. 9.—Because her love for Edward Barros was unrequited, Maria Anello, nineteen years old, made her way to Barros's room by walking along a narrow cornice four stories from the ground, broke open his trunk with a hammer, took his revolver and shot herself in the right temple.

Then, with blood streaming from the wound she made her way to the floor below into the tenement of Mrs. Lena Camara, crying, "I have shot myself."

Medical assistance was summoned and the police notified. The girl was removed to the Union Hospital, where she is in a serious condition.

OLDFIELD WILL RACE AT READVILLE TO-DAY

FAMOUS AUTO DRIVER MAY MAKE NEW RECORDS ON OILED TRACK.

Barney Oldfield will positively be on hand to do battle in the races of the Bay State Automobile Association at Readville this afternoon. Immediately after his exhibition ride on the track at Bethlehem, Pa., yesterday afternoon he shipped his machines by express for Boston, and this will give him ample time to get his cars in shape for the contests of this afternoon.

Cedrino, the famous Italian driver, reached Boston yesterday so that there is no question about the appearance of these two men in the races postponed from last Monday. Basle, the driver of the Bowden car, has been applying all his time during the past week to getting his record breaker in shape for the contests, as he realizes that he is to drive against the world's most famous operator, and he must desires to defeat that champion.

Hilliard and Batt have both spent considerable time in overhauling and placing their machines in the very best of condition so that a real fast contest is anticipated. The three steamers that are entered for the several events have been doing some particularly fast work, and if reports are true are capable of giving the gasolene explosive cars the hardest kind of a hard battle.

In the touring car classes all the machines entered are in the very finest of condition, and in these as well as in the weight classes the competition is bound to be most interesting. In addition to riding the several events, Barney Oldfield will drive two exhibitions during the afternoon, and it is probable that both Basle and Cedrino will likewise go for records with their machines.

The work of oiling the track was undertaken and completed yesterday afternoon, and it should be in the very finest of shape this afternoon. The first race will start promptly at 2 o'clock.

SALEM FEAST WILL BE "DRY"

SALEM, Sept. 9.—No champagne will be served at the grand banquet to be held by the Salem Light Infantry Association in honor of its 100th anniversary. All intoxicating liquors will be cut off the menu. The spread will be served in Company H Armory in the Franklin building. This is State property, and when Adjutant General William Stanford was asked permission to serve intoxicating liquors he refused to admit it.

BRITT AND NELSON READY FOR BATTLE

Big Fellow Likely to Referee Great Bout at Colma This Afternoon, Though Dispute Has Not Been Finally Settled—Nolan Holds Out.

By W. W. Naughton.

SPECIAL TO BOSTON AMERICAN OVER LONGEST LEASED WIRE IN THE WORLD.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 9.—To-day is the day. Two pugilists, trained to the hour, will meet in battle and fight to the bitter end. It will be a fierce fight. There may be generalship and shiftiness and that kind of thing, but in some of the rounds, at least, the championship and the big money will be forgotten, and they will smash each other like fellows who have a mutual grudge in their hearts. Nelson thinks he will win. He said:

"If Britt will come at me and fight the way I want to fight, that big building will be empty in less than an hour from the time of the starting bell. It will be all over in twelve rounds."

Britt does not care about expressing an opinion as to the length of the fight.

"I do not know how long it will last," said he. "I feel, though, it will not go the limit. If I were compelled to say where it would end, I would pick some round between the twentieth and the twenty-fifth. Nelson will get all the close fighting he wants this time."

Nolan, manager of Nelson, is maintaining his reputation for stubbornness. Late last night a telephone message came from the Nelson quarters that all difficulties had been smoothed over and that Nelson had agreed to accept Jeffries as referee. Nolan, when seen at the last moment, denied this. He said:

STILL AGAINST JEFFRIES.

"I don't know who is going to referee the fight, but Jeffries will not be the man."

Somehow what Nolan says does not cut much figure at this late stage of the proceedings. Jeffries has made up his mind that Nolan is irresponsible and that his objections do not weigh.

Jeffries said that when he stepped into the ring he would first assure himself that he was acceptable to the club and that then he would turn to the fighters and ascertain how they felt about him acting. "It may become necessary for me to throw this fellow Nolan out of the ring," said Jeffries with a dangerous twinkle in his dark eyes.

The wise men of sportdom have made up their minds that Nolan's attitude presages weakness of some sort, and that Britt is a good man to back. They don't know whether Nelson is shy on condition or Nolan had some plan which he is afraid Jeffries will interrupt. They only feel that there is a lack of confidence in the Nelson camp. It is the old story, "Money talks," and in this case money is bellowing.

Britt is a strong favorite at 10 to 7, and, despite all reports to the contrary, it is not the money of professional gamblers.

There were Olympic Club men and south of Market street men, who had gone to school with Britt. Some of them had only $5 to bet, but they wanted to bet it on Britt at the best odds. It was a strange state of affairs as far as the wagering was concerned. Here in San Francisco, when Britt and Nelson finished their last fight, you could hear people saying: "A close thing, and Jimmy earned the decision; but

MOB DRAGS MARQUIS ITO'S STATUE THROUGH STREETS

KOBE POLICE HAVE CONFLICT WITH RIOTERS

Churches Are Destroyed and Houses Wrecked in Japanese Towns.

SPECIAL SESSION OF DIET

TOKIO, Sept. 9.—After an anti-peace meeting at Kobe a crowd of 1,000 went to the Minatogwa temple, where a statue to Marquis Ito was recently erected, attached a rope to the statue, pulled it from its pedestal and dragged it through the streets. The crowd also charged three police boxes, where there was some fighting.

Church property was destroyed and damaged. The Catholic Church, school and priest's residence in Honjo were destroyed. Four small houses at Honjo were also burned, and the Protestant Church at Honjo, under the pastorate of Aubery Armstrong, an American, and the latter's residence, were burned. Three mission churches in the Asakusa district were partly wrecked.

A mob attacked the Methodist Church on Dhuchimachi street, wrecked the walls and fences and carried part of the furniture into the street and burned it. Yonokura and Komacho churches in Nihon Bashi were looted.

The government has suspended five local newspapers. More trouble is expected, although many believe the worst part is over unless a clash with the military occurs, resulting in bloodshed.

Call for a special session of the Diet will soon be issued, it is believed.

Government officers and the better class of Japanese citizens are expressing keen regret over the attacks on Christian churches.

The members of the Harriman party have gone to Nikko, having canceled the local programme for their entertainment. The attack on the Harriman party is not regarded as a demonstration against American or other foreigners, but is believed to have been largely the result of the time and circumstances.

The passage of street cars through the crowded streets angered the people, and they drove off the crews and passengers and set fire to the cars. Fifteen large cars were destroyed.

JAPS ATTACK THE LEGATION OF GREAT BRITAIN

LONDON, Sept. 9.—A dispatch to the Standard from Shanghai says that, according to Consul Lambert Lovegrove, a German mail boat, an attack was made on the Japanese malcontents on the British legation in Tokio. It is said there is a widespread belief in Japan that the Mikado's acceptance of the peace terms was largely due to the presence of England.

Fear is expressed in London lest the violent demonstrations in Tokio against the peace treaty may spread to Manchuria and infect the Japanese army with discontent, leading to excesses which conceivably might result in reopening hostilities against the Russian forces. Some military writers say it would not be surprising if, under the leadership of a few disgruntled generals, the army decided to abandon the remarkable restraint and discipline which it has exhibited throughout the war.

BEST BUTTERWORTH PICTURE BY HORNER

Possibly the best photograph of the late Hezekiah Butterworth ever published in this city was that published last Tuesday by the BOSTON AMERICAN, bodyguard credit for the picture was omitted by this paper. The likeness is copyrighted by Carl J. Horner, of No. 387 Washington street, who made it. The BOSTON AMERICAN takes pleasure in giving due credit to Mr. Horner. For a long time Mr. Horner's studio was on Winter street. It was a short while ago that he moved to the more extensive quarters in Washington street.

MANY BABES IN PERIL AT FIRE

NEW YORK, Sept. 9.—Fire, starting in the laboratory of the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research, which occupies a wing of Rockefeller Childs' Hospital and nursery in Lexington avenue, between Fifteenth and Fifty-first streets, for a time seemed to imperil the lives of hundreds of mothers and their babies in the hospital.

They were started through the boiling over of an oily concoction in the absence of a physician who was making some researches. The physicians and nurses in the children's hospital began preparations for a hurried removal of their patients. A fire company across the street subdued the flames by a vigorous attack.

ANOTHER BROCKTON POLICEMAN DROPPED

RESERVE OFFICER WALL FOUND GUILTY OF IMMORAL CONDUCT BY MAYOR KEITH.

Special to the Boston American.

BROCKTON, Sept. 9.—Frank E. Wall, a reserve officer of the police force of Brockton, has been dismissed by Mayor Edward H. Keith. He is the second man to receive such treatment as a result of the shaking of the condition of municipal affairs.

An investigation that startled this city was begun a short time ago which resulted in the discharge of Inspector Charles E. Harris. A young woman made serious charges against Harris and during the hearing that followed it was asserted that the police station had been used improperly by the officer.

The allegation against Wall was the same as that made against Harris.

Wall's trial took place on Thursday, he being represented by Lawyers John B. Moran of Boston and Joseph Morian of this city, while City Solicitor Dowd appeared for the prosecution.

Mayor Keith's decision is as follows:

Frank E. Wall: Sir—You are hereby notified that after due notice and hearing as required by statute I find you guilty of improper and immoral conduct. I hereby remove you from the office which you now hold as a reserve police officer of this city under the civil service rules of the Commonwealth. This removal to take effect at once.

EDWARD H. KEITH, Mayor.

The case against Wall involved the name of a certain prominent society woman, who was single at the time referred to in the charges, but is now happily married and a resident of a neighboring town. Her name was suppressed at the hearing.

The case is a direct outcome of the removal of Inspector Chester E. Harris from the force, charged with immoral conduct. Wall was a witness against Harris, and immediately after the trial charges were preferred against him.

EARTHQUAKE KILLED 410; 600 INJURED

$10,000,000 Damage to Property Estimate of Loss in the Stricken District in Italy.

KING IS PROMPT TO AID

ROME, Sept. 9.—Earthquake shocks in Calabria and Messina, killing over 400 and injuring 600, laying villages and towns waste and causing damage to property estimated at $10,000,000, have caused terrible depression throughout all Italy. King Victor Emmanuel, who is sojourning at Valdambrosa, as soon as he learned of the catastrophe, sent $1,000 to the aid of the sufferers and instructed the officials to give all possible assistance.

Although the earthquake was felt all over Calabria and to a certain extent in Sicily, the worst news comes from Plaia and Monteleone and from twenty-five villages which are said to have been completely destroyed. According to the latest news received 410 persons are known to have been killed and a great number more are injured. It is as yet impossible to even estimate the property losses.

The shock lasted for eighteen seconds at Cantanzaro and was scarcely less severe at Messina, Reggio, Monteleone, Martinano, Stefacona, Filocastro, Tripodi, Casamatta, Cessanitti Maida, Olida and other points.

Scenes of Terror Follow.

Scenes of indescribable terror ensued. Women, aroused from their sleep rushed half clothed into the streets screaming with fear, carrying their babies and dragging along their other children and calling for help on the Madonna and the saints. Many men passed the night in the open with their families, all calling on their favorite saints for protection.

The cafes were taken by assault by the strangely excited crowd, but as daylight broke without a repetition of the earthquake the crowd gradually melted away until by 8 o'clock the streets had almost assumed their normal appearance except in the ruined villages, where the inhabitants had no houses to go to. The general confusion was added to by dreadful cries from the jails, where the prisoners were beside themselves with fright and in some cases mutinied, but fortunately all the prisoners were kept within bounds.

According to the latest telegrams received the earthquake has seriously damage to houses in San Floro, where nine persons were killed.

At Jonadi ten persons were killed and a hundred wounded.

At Dasfalli buildings were damaged and a number of persons were killed or wounded.

Troops have been despatched to the scenes of the disaster, and engineers have been sent to Monteleone, Plaia, Glinglihaho, and Monteleone de Calabria.

42 TRUE BILLS BY GRAND JURY

The Suffolk County grand jury to-day reported to Judge Fox that as a result of its September sitting forty-two indictments and thirteen "no bills" had been found. Many of the cases considered were those of men charged with burglary. Sixteen true bills and seven no bills were returned by the grand jury in offences of this kind.

Harry Stromhoff, who fought a pistol duel with police officers in Roxbury before he was captured, and Arthur Polk and Thomas Cullen, who entered a house on Greenwood Park, West End, and robbed the occupants away on a vacation, lived a week at the house, were indicted.

BOY'S BRAIN IS REVERSED

PORTLAND, Me., Sept. 9.—Physicians are amazed at the extraordinary course the mind of Roy Bailey, a seven-year-old Deering child, who fell about two months ago, fighting his head, has taken. Everything the little fellow sees is reversed. When asked to spell his name he spells it backward as readily as he spelled it correctly before he was injured.

The boy lay unconscious for about two months, and when he first regained his senses seemed to have lost all memory of late happenings. He talks about his baby days and knows nothing about his injury. He is unable to use his hands or feet.

BUILT UP HER HEALTH

SPEEDY CURE OF MISS GOODE

She Is Made Well by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and Writes Gratefully to Mrs. Pinkham.

For the wonderful help that she has found Miss Cora Goode, 3535 E. Chicago Avenue, Chicago, Ill., believes it her duty to write the following letter for publication, in order that other women afflicted in the same way may be benefited as she was. Miss Goode is president of the Bryn Mawr Lawn Tennis Club of Chicago. She writes:

Miss Cora Goode

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"I tried many different remedies to try to build up my system, which had become run down from loss of proper rest and unreasonable hours, but nothing seemed to help me. Finally, on a great advertising of Mrs. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for female troubles, having used it herself some years ago with great success. So I began to take it, and in less than a month I was able to be out of bed and out of doors, and in three months I was entirely well. Really I have never felt so strong and well as I have since."

No other medicine has such a record of cures of female troubles as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Women who are troubled with painful or irregular menstruation, backache, bloating (or flatulence), leucorrhœa, falling, inflammation or ulceration of the uterus, ovarian troubles, faintness, indigestion, nervous prostration or the blues, should take immediate action to ward off the serious consequences, and be restored to perfect health and strength by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health. Her experience is very great, and she gives the benefit of it to all who stand in need of wise counsel. Address, Lynn, Mass.

NELSON AND BRITT ARE BOTH CONFIDENT

Nelson for my money if they ever meet in a finish."

FAVORITE IN FINISH FIGHT.

There is a finish fight in sight to-day, and Britt is an overwhelming favorite in the betting at the eleventh hour last night was 10 to 6, and it is more than probable that it will be 2 to 1 to-day.

Is it true that San Francisco have made up their minds that Britt is a better fighter than they thought? Is it that they think Nelson and Nelson are going to turn a trick?

Where are all the people that a few short months ago argued that Battling Nelson would be Britt's master in the finish fight?

The answer will be furnished some time this afternoon.

Nolan stated that no determination had been reached in regard to the referee.

JIMMY BRITT HAS LOST TWO FIGHTS, BOTH ON FOULS

In his professional career Jimmy Britt has fought thirteen contests. In only one of fights he has lost but twice, and each of these times on a foul—once to Jack O'Keefe of Portland, Ore., and once to Joe Gans. His first fight out of Olympic Club circles was with Toby Irwin early in the year 1902. In his next three battles, with Tim Hagerty, Kid Lavigne and Frank Erne, he scored the only three real knockouts in his record.

After the fight he lost to Jack O'Keefe at Portland, he won the decision over Willie Fitzgerald. A return fight with Jack O'Keefe, at Butte, Mont., he got a draw and seventeen months later took the decision from Charlie Sieger.

Probably the hardest battle of his career was when he met Martin Canole at Colma, and in the twenty-fifth round after the extra five rounds ordered by the referee was given the decision. He got the decision from Young Corbett and by defeating the boxer had earned the title as champion lightweight of the world.

After the wild fight with Joe Gans he was given the decision over Battling Nelson, and then defeated Jabez White. His last fight was with Kid Sullivan, whom he outclassed in twenty rounds.

NELSON HAS TAKEN THE SHORT END OF PURSE NINE TIMES

Since entering the ring, in 1896, Nelson has fought seventy battles. Of these he has been the victor on forty-one occasions, having an enviable record of knockouts in his earlier fights. Nine times he has taken the short end of the purse, and has fought seven draws. It was in his fight with Spider Welch at Salt Lake City, when he beat that lad in sixteen rounds, that his appearance for championship honors first took a serious turn. This was in April, 1904.

He next won from Martin Canole in eighteen rounds. This was in May, 1904, and two months later he beat Eddie Hanlon down in nineteen rounds. He then fought Aurelio Herrera in Butte and won the decision, returning to San Francisco and defeating Young Corbett in ten rounds.

In December of last year, after a gruelling fight, the Dane went down to defeat at the hands of Jimmy Britt, who was given the decision. Nelson then tried his hand in the six-round bouts in the East, where he battled first with Jack O'Neil, who managed to last six rounds. Abe Attel was the next opponent, and the contest went the six rounds without a decision. Kid Sullivan of Baltimore also stayed six rounds.

Articles for the Britt-Nelson Fight.

The articles of agreement signed by Britt and Nelson are unparalleled in pugilistic history. Only upon two other occasions have bigger purses been offered to fighters. The articles follow:

Articles of agreement entered into between James Edward Britt, represented by his representative, Billy Nolan, and James W. Coffroth, representing the Colma Club, etc., witnesseth:

The Colma Club hereby offers 65 per cent. of gross receipts for contest between Britt and Nelson between the 7th and 11th days of September, 1905, at an arena to be designated by them. The Colma Club guaranteeing that contestants' end of gate receipts will be at least $20,000—that is, so far as Britt is concerned; in other words:

If Britt wins, the club gives him 65 per cent of gate receipts and guarantees that same amount to be $20,000. If Nelson wins, he is to receive 65 per cent. of receipts without guarantee.

Britt and Nelson agree to box 45 or more rounds, winner to take entire contestants' end of the money.

Britt and Nelson agree that Marquis of Queensberry rules shall govern the contest, gloves of regular size to be used, and contest to be given in accordance with all legal requirements.

Britt and Nelson agree to weigh in at 133 pounds at 10 a. m. on the day of contest at Harry Corbett's.

Contestants to be prepared to enter the ring between the hours of 1 and 3 o'clock on the day of contest.

Referee to be selected by contestants on or before evening of August 26, 1905.

Britt and Nelson agree to forfeit $2,500 each to the club in event of their failure to agree upon referee. Automatic check to be installed by the club.

Britt and Nelson agree to post $2,500 each for compliance with these articles of agreement, the club at the same time posting like amount of $2,500, divided between Britt and Nelson if it fails to live up to its part of the agreement.

Britt and Nelson agree that if either one fails to comply with these articles to forfeit $2,000 to the club and the other $500 of the $2,500 forfeit to the contestant complying.

Harry E. Corbett is hereby named as stakeholder.

Soft surgical bandages are hereby permitted. Neither party to engage in boxing contests or exhibitions of any kind before date of this contest.

TRAINS CRASH; 3 DEAD; 5 HURT

Hope for Rector Hall's Recovery.

NEW YORK SPORTS MAKE FEW BETS

By Boston American Leased Wire.

NEW YORK, Sept. 9.—Local sporting men look for a great battle when Jimmy Britt and Battling Nelson meet in the ring at Colma, Cal., this afternoon.

Few matches of recent years have aroused so much interest as the meeting between these two clever lightweights, who are expected to put up a fight that will live long in ring history.

Although the interest in the outcome of the battle is intense, few heavy wagers have been made by the local sports. There was little betting along Broadway last night, only a few bets of small amounts being made. Those who were inclined to back Nelson or Britt a week ago for as much money as they could place on the result seemed satisfied to get down a little money.

This change of mind is said to be due to the odds offered on Britt in San Francisco, where 10 to 7 have been freely offered. There are many who ones along Broadway who feel that even this should be the prevailing figures, and the fact that Britt was installed favorite by the Californians has made the Broadway sporting men do some hard thinking, and they are willing to stand by and see men decide the question on its merits.

The selection of Jeffries has given the backers of the rival fighters confidence, for they are satisfied that the champion will not permit any violation of the rules. George Considine, who usually bets heavily on all important pugilistic events, has decided to pass up the Britt-Nelson go.

The opinion of local sporting men as to the probable winner is fairly well divided. Among those who pick Britt are Tom O'Rourke, Young Corbett, Steve Douglas, Mashey Mayer, Dan Murphy, Paddy Roche, Jim Corbett, Frankie Dwyer, Eddie Fitzgerald, Tom Sharkey, Ted Marks, Sam Harris, George Cohan, Cash Sloan, Frank Johnson, Kid McCoy, George Grand and Bob Armstrong.

3 ALIENISTS TESTIFY THAT KEYES IS SANE

Also Declare Their Belief That He Was in His Right Mind When He Shot Wife.

ALL HAVE EXAMINED HIM

Special to the Boston American.

BANGOR, Me., Sept. 9.—Dr. Bigelow T. Sanborn, of Augusta, superintendent of the State Hospital for the Insane, the principal witness in the trial of Elmer E. Keyes, charged with wife-murder, Dr. Vaughan, superintendent of the state Hospital at Bangor, and Dr. Galen M. Woodcock, of Bangor, all three experts on insanity, declare Keyes to be sane.

Dr. Sanborn flatly contradicted Drs. Sanger, Hunt and Addison L. Thayer, of Portland. He was upheld by Dr. Vaughan and Dr. Woodcock, although Dr. Woodcock, in one or two small instances, did not accord fully with the views of the other physicians.

Dr. Addison L. Thayer of Portland, the star witness of the defense, occupied the stand for about an hour just before adjournment. He declared emphatically that Keyes was insane, and later in the day said dramatically that he was unable to distinguish between right and wrong at the time he shot his wife.

The evidence is all in. The arguments will be made to-day, and it is expected that the case will go to the jury this afternoon at 4 o'clock.

Dr. Sanborn was called to the stand for the State in rebuttal.

"How often did you see Mr. Keyes the month and a half that he was under your observance?"

"I saw him frequently."

"What was the course of your observation?"

"I first examined his physical condition."

Suspected Nephritis.

"What did you find?"

"First, that there was a dropsy-like condition of the limbs. I also noticed a peculiar condition of one of the knees. I elicited from him the information that he was troubled with rheumatism. I then asked him if he had ever met with an accident, and he said that one day while about his duties in the station he was forced, to avoid being injured, to whirl around quickly and that he knew he was badly wrenched. This seemed to me to be entirely probable.

"I thought from the dropsical condition of the lower limbs that he might be troubled with nephritis. Another thing which I noticed was the absence of the 'knee-jerk,' which has already been mentioned in testimony. When Mr. Keyes left the hospital, he was stronger in every way than when he came. He had a moderate appetite and slept fairly well. Mr. Keyes had been placed, upon his arrival, in the infirmary, which is in charge of a nurse, with four assistants by day and one by night. He was a quiet, gentlemanly man, and I gave him certain liberties which he never abused.

"There may be certain conditions in which a man, without delusion or a faulty belief, may suffer from insanity. Generally there are hallucinations. And by hallucinations I mean seeing objects that do not exist. I saw nothing indicating insanity."

"You have heard all the defence?"

Witness said that he had never observed a case of paresis from the incipient stage without there being inarticulation of speech. Another symptom is difficulty in locomotion, not the same as is observed in locomotor ataxia, but a stumbling, tripping gait.

"Another symptom is an abnormal imagination; an extreme expansive egotism; extravagant ideas regarding ability to amass a fortune. It sometimes happens, although infrequently, that this particular disease may be caused by apoplexy and cause bleeding in sanity."

"You have heard all the defence?"

Witness said that he had never observed a case of paresis from the incipient stage without there being inarticulation of speech. Another symptom is difficulty in locomotion, not the same as is observed in locomotor ataxia, but a stumbling, tripping gait.

"Another symptom is an abnormal imagination; an extreme expansive egotism; extravagant ideas regarding ability to amass a fortune. It sometimes happens, although infrequently, that this particular disease may be caused by apoplexy and cause bleeding in sanity."

"Did you find any symptoms of paralysis?"

"I did not."

"What about writing letters when suffering from general paralysis?"

"It would be exceedingly difficult."

No Signs of Insanity.

"You have heard the testimony of what took place before and after the shooting. Can you tell me if you have discovered anything at all in the conduct of Keyes at the time of the shooting his wife that indicates that he was insane?"

"I do not."

"Could he have been feigning at the hospital?"

"He could not have been."

"In your opinion, assuming the testimony of the State to be true, was Elmer Keyes sane or insane when he shot his wife?"

"He was sane."

Here Judge Stearns for the defence, then asked on cross-examination:

"Assuming that the testimony of the defence is true, that Elmer Keyes told a true story in the court, was he sane or insane when he shot his wife?"

"Mr. Keyes told me ——"

"I didn't ask you that, doctor."

"Well, assuming the testimony given to me by Mr. Keyes ——"

"I didn't ask you that, doctor."

Judge Stearns impressively repeated his first question.

"Judge Stearns wishes to limit you, doctor," said the court.

Then assuming," said Dr. Sanborn, in reiterating, "that all the testimony in behalf of the defence and the story of the accused is true, he was insane when he shot his wife."

Keyes Has No Paresis.

Dr. F. H. S. Vaughan, superintendent of the Eastern Maine Insane Hospital at Bangor, took the stand after a brief recess.

Dr. Vaughan's testimony was, in a general way, similar to that of Dr. Sanborn. He describes locomotor ataxia and paresis, their effects and results. Witness said that insanity did not generally follow locomotor ataxia. The symptoms and a description of the attending characteristics of general paralysis were then referred to.

"How about articulation, doctor?"

"Articulation is confused."

"In your examination of Elmer Keyes did you find signs of locomotor ataxia?"

"Perhaps faint signs."

"In your opinion has Elmer Keyes paresis?"

"No, sir."

"Taking into consideration observation, testimony and all attendant facts, in your opinion, was Mr. Keyes sane or insane when he shot his wife?"

"Sane."

Cross-examination:

"Is insanity hereditary?"

"It is."

"Assuming Mr. Keyes's story to be true, assuming all the testimony you have heard for the defence to be true, was Keyes sane or insane when he shot his wife?"

"He was sane."

Dr. Galen M. Woodcock testified that he had examined Keyes in the county jail after his removal from the hospital and immediately subsequent to his arraignment in the lower court.

Mr. Parsen then asked the witness if, after having observed the prisoner and having heard the testimony, in his opinion was he sane or insane on the fatal night.

"Sane," said Dr. Woodcock.

Then Judge Stearns asked the doctor if, disregarding the testimony of the defence and assuming the testimony of the defence to be true, Keyes was sane or insane when he shot his wife.

"Assuming the evidence for the defence to be true, he was insane."

DEFENDANT ADMITS FRIENDSHIP IN DOW $25,000 ALIENATION CASE

Sketched in Court by Boston American Staff Artist.

MRS. DOW AND FRIEND, MRS. McMAHON.

Former Friends Now Enemies; One Accuses Other of Stealing Wife's Affections.

Counsel Says Husband Abused His Wife, and That Bulfinch Acted in Manly Way.

SALEM, Sept. 9.—This old county seat has been the scene of many hard fought legal battles, both civil and criminal, but for a decade there has not been a case in southern Essex County that has attracted so much attention and set the gossips talking to such an extent as the case now before Chief Justice Aiken, in the Superior Civil Court, in which Alvah Dow of Lynn seeks to recover $25,000 for alleged alienation of his wife's affections by Charles F. Bulfinch of the same city.

Charles Bulfinch is a man of means. He owns the largest drug store in Lynn and considerable real estate. He has lived in the "Shoe City" all his life, moves in the best society and is popular. Alvah Dow is not a rich man, but has always earned a good living and has a host of friends. Dow and Bulfinch were for years the best of friends, intimate enough to go hunting together and spend many hours together at the races. Now they are deadly enemies, for the younger man charges the older man with stealing his wife's affections and is trying to recover money for the love that he says he has lost.

Dow's case has been placed before the jury. His lawyer put on witnesses to show that Bulfinch has been too friendly with his wife. Lawyer Niles is now putting in Bulfinch's side of the case, and will place the jury that he will not try to prove that Bulfinch was not in Mrs. Dow's company a great deal, but that he would try to prove that Dow had abused his wife and that Bulfinch had been a friend to her in a manly, straightforward sort of way.

Dow Objected to Bulfinch.

Dow testified that he met Mrs. Dow and Bulfinch on the road to Nahant and objected to Bulfinch being in his wife's company so much.

Here are some of the questions which Lawyer Niles put to his client:

Q.—Aside from the night of the Nahant scout Dow never objected to your visiting his house, did he? A.—No.

Q.—Where did you first meet Mrs. Dow on the night of the Nahant affair? A.—I met her on Chester street, Lynn.

Q.—Then you went by the Nahant road towards Nahant, on your bicycles? A.—Yes.

Q.—You and Mrs. Dow stopped on the road? A.—Yes.

Q.—Then what happened? A.—Dow came past on his bicycle.

Q.—Is the road well lighted? A.—Yes.

Q.—After Dow went by what occurred? A.—He returned to us.

Dow Was Sorry.

Q.—What was it Dow said to you? A.—I do not may take the ——, I don't want her.

Q.—What did you say? A.—I said he was too impulsive and his language was uncalled for, and that if he could not talk better he had better go home.

Q.—When he left did he leave you and Mrs. Dow together? A.—He did.

Q.—What did you and Mrs. Dow do? A.—We followed along together on our wheels.

Q.—Later what happened? A.—A few days later he wrote me a note asking me to come over to his house and have a smoke talk. Then he came over to my store and said he was sorry for what he had said on the Nahant road. He said he was hasty and that he sometimes thought he was crazy.

Q.—Did you and Dow ever go to the theatre together? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did you go automobiling? A.—Yes.

Q.—In your auto or his? A.—In mine.

Mr. Bulfinch then testified that he and Dow went to the races and the beach and drummed together up to the time Dow and his wife separated.

Q.—The night before the trousers were found at the foot of the bed in the Dow flat were you there smoking? A.—Yes.

Q.—How much did Mrs. Dow ride a bicycle? A.—Every day.

Q.—When she rode what sort of a skirt did she wear? A.—A short one.

Dined Together in Boston.

Q.—Was there any evening when Dow came and found you in his dining room with his wife? A.—Quite a few times. There were times when I was there by appointment with him and got there before him.

Q.—Have you been in a dining room or hotel with his wife? A.—Yes, at Macomber's, in Boston, a few times.

Q.—How did that happen? A.—We went there with friends.

Q.—Where did you go that night? A.—To the theatre.

Q.—Were there others with you? A.—Yes, another man and his lady friend.

Q.—Were you ever alone again at a public house with Mrs. Dow? A.—At Lawrence once, when we were automobiling; but now I think of it, we had little seven-year-old Doris MacMahon with us.

Doris MacMahon is the daughter of Mrs. John MacMahon, Mrs. Dow's intimate friend, who was in court with her.

Q.—Where did you have dinner in Lawrence? A.—At the Franklin House.

Q.—Have you ever given Mrs. Dow money? A.—No.

Q.—When you went to Marston's who paid the bill? A.—I did.

Q.—At the Franklin House, Lawrence, who paid the bill? A.—I did.

Q.—Did you ever drink in Mrs. Dow's flat when her husband was not there? A.—Yes, but not with her.

Mr. Dow has accused Mr. Bulfinch of being drunk at his house for a long time and Lawyer Niles, after several questions on that subject, had his witness and client acknowledge that he had been sick in the house that two days with a bad cold and drank liquor during that period.

"During your two days' stay at the Dow flat with whom did you sleep?" asked Attorney Niles.

"I slept with Mr. Dow," was the reply.

Mr. Dow had previously testified that Mr. Bulfinch was drunk in his flat and slept on the lounge.

The court then adjourned, Mr. Bulfinch testified that three weeks after Dow and his wife separated he talked with both of them and tried to bring about a reconciliation.

ROCKEFELLER RIDES WHEEL

CLEVELAND, O., Sept. 9.—John D. Rockefeller has taken to bicycle riding for his health. He has got so he can ride with out a relay of men to hold him on the saddle. He says he likes it, but feels sore and strained.

John D. was taken to the bicycle because he needs exercise. His barefoot boy stunt gave him some exhilaration, but the dew on his bare feet was chilling and did not please him. He has been several weeks learning how to ride, and now that he has mastered the steel brute he considers himself the victor of a conquest greater than his fight to consolidate the world's oil wells.

HORSE THROWS HELOISE MEYER AT LENOX SHOW

Sister of the Ambassador Has a Narrow Escape from Fatal Injury.

BLOODGOOD HORSES WIN

LENOX, Sept. 9.—Miss Heloise Meyer, of Boston, sister of Ambassador Meyer, now at St. Petersburg, had an extremely narrow escape from a fatal accident at the horse show on William D. Sloane's Highlawn farm. She was mounted on Vitesse in the woman's saddle horse class and the animal stopped and nearly rolled over upon Miss Meyer, but by prompt action she escaped unhurt. Mrs. Robb de Peyster Tytus of New York while riding chimney Sweep over four hurdles was also thrown, but unhurt.

The horse show was the best given here. Perfect weather, fine horses and a brilliant attendance of over 6,000 persons, including Secretary of the Navy Bonaparte, the British and American ambassadors, members of the German and Swiss legations, and the wealth and fashion of the Berkshire resorts.

There was a great day for the stables of Harry S. Bloodgood of New Marlboro and New York. The Misses Bloodgood exhibited the horses and ended the day with eight firsts, four seconds, three thirds and one fourth, a total of eighteen awards. The next largest winner was Girard Foster of New York, who took four first awards, two seconds and two thirds.

Miss Gladys A. Bloodgood, who is only fourteen years old, was pronounced by Charles P. Williams, one of the judges, to be the best girl driver of her age he had ever seen. Two diplomats appeared in the ring. Count Bressler of the German embassy drove for John Sloane in one class, and Ernest Beale, third secretary of the British embassy, drove for Sir Mortimer Durand, the British ambassador, in several classes.

$1,000,000 GRAIN ELEVATOR IS DESTROYED

Fire Wipes Out Great Santa Fe Structure at Chicago Early To-day.

ONE OF BIGGEST IN WEST

By Boston American Leased Wire.

CHICAGO, Sept. 9.—Fire early to-day destroyed the Santa Fe grain elevator at West Twenty-seventh street and Ashland avenue, causing a loss of nearly $1,000,000.

When the first firemen arrived the flames were shooting high above the structure, threatening for a time to spread to other buildings in the vicinity. Scores of loaded freight cars standing in the railroad yards were taken away and saved from destruction. The blaze was extinguished after a hard fight.

The elevator was one of the largest in the West and contained more than 1,000,000 bushels of wheat.

Jake Stahl and his Senators will be here to-day to line up in battle array for the first of the series with the Champs and there is more trouble ahead while they are on the grounds.

After toying with Highlanders they will come to the Hub chock full of confidence and must be stopped at the outset or some damage will be done before they desert.

The Champs will have to ginger up to be up to the running with such a foe to contend with and get out of the spell that was on while the Athletics ran the game.

Champs May Redeem Themselves.

Here is where the Champs have got a chance to redeem themselves, as they were used pretty roughly at the start of the schedule by the same team, which is practically the cause for the low standing that they hold, as the local team never fully recovered from the setback got at the outset.

Tannehill is on tap to open the series which makes the outlook all in favor of the home aggregation.

That bugbear of the batters, the spit ball, caused the downfall of the Champs in the last game with the Athletics, and Jimmy Dygert, the latest recruit to the ranks of the Quakers, was the boy who worked the charm.

Babe Waddell started the game, but in the second inning, after a double, a bunter and a single had been produced off his delivery, Captain Cross decided to send Babe to pasture, and brought out his find from New Orleans, who was a pigmy in size but a giant when it came to connecting with a volley of spit balls.

Old Cy Not at His Best.

Old Cy was not up to his best form, but wanted to take a chance at the Quakers before they got away, and his curves were handled rather freely.

There was some satisfaction in driving the Babe to the stable, and the fans were in ecstacy when the star twirler got his bumps and was forced to retire, but their happiness was short lived, as little Dygert was up to do his trick act.

For six innings the Champs held the lead, when Tenney Hartsel created much confusion by hammering out a double and scoring two runs, which changed the complexion of things, and paved the way for more developments as far as the Champs were concerned.

The Champs were the first to count when Collins smashed a double to deep center to stole home, while the crowd chided the Quakers for their poor baseball judgment.

Boston couldn't do anything with Wiltse, who aided his team to win by good fielding, batting and pitching.

The Boston started the game in the lead and for a time it looked as though they might take the Giants into camp, but when the latter were once aroused they made their bows at their visitors from Beantown.

Muggsy McGraw was greatly pleased to see the Reds beat the Pirates, and now believes that his team has the pennant clinched.

However, the Giants have yet to go on a Western trip, and it may prove their undoing.

NOTES OF THE GAME.

Three out of four for the Quakers.

* * *

Guess Connie Mack has got the pennant clinched if the team continues at the same rate.

* * *

Dygert is the goods and is a master of the spitball and knows how to field his position.

* * *

Al Selbach was all in when he got around to the plate after his home run. He nearly toppled over going the last stretch.

* * *

Lave Cross's clutch of Parent's liner a foot from the ground in his left mit was the feature catch.

* * *

All of the Quakers' runs were made after two were out, which was not to the liking of the fans.

* * *

Babe took his transfer in good humor. Trainer Nichols had to rub his arm a massage just before he went into the box.

* * *

There was not a pitfer on either catcher. Criger caught his rival, Backstop Schreck, off the first ball by a whirlwind throw which was flashy.

* * *

Not a discredit mark against the Quakers and the only error of judgment occurred when Murphy got in the way of Seybold, giving Ferris a soft single.

JIMMY BRITT AND HIS PARTNER RAFAEL THROWING MEDICINE BALL

DOUBLE-HEADER IN SLOWTOWN TO-DAY

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 9.—After winning one game out of three from the Giants, the Boston Nationals play a doubleheader here to-day. The visitors seem hopelessly lost in the race, and the best they can do now is stay out of the tail-end position.

"Little Cy" Young and Jim Wilhelm may serve up the pellets for the visitors, while Flanagan and Sparks may work for the locals.

Bobby Fraser faced the New Yorks yesterday, and had speed to burn. However, he was as wild as a hawk and was apt to throw the ball over the grand stand at moments.

Although the Giants didn't do any remarkable stick work, they toyed with the Bostons.

With the ball in Fraser's hand, ready to toss the delivery to Bateman, Jimmy Delehanty stole home, while the crowd chided the Boston battery for their poor baseball judgment.

Boston couldn't do anything with Wiltse, who aided his team to win by good fielding, batting and pitching.

The Bostons started the game in the lead and for a time it looked as though they might take the Giants into camp, but when the latter were once aroused they made their bows at their visitors from Beantown.

CHRISTIE HAD NARROW ESCAPE FROM DEATH

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Sept. 9.—Walter Christie, the daring driver of the Blue Flyer, escaped death by a minute to-day when the rear cylinders of his car exploded while the machine was tearing along at a 100-mile clip in an effort to break Lee Oldfield's thirty-eight seconds made by Christie on the Atlantic City beach track. Spectators who saw the explosion supposed that the machine had blown to pieces, but the flying car dove out through the smoke and covered long stretches of sand until the intrepid driver again got control and drove it into a sand bank, where the whizzing wheels were brought to a standstill while the two men rolled out to safety.

BROCKTON, Sept. 9.—Walkover, with Ruth O'Brien in the box, easily defeated the Taunton New England Leaguers at Walkover Park, 8 to 3. O'Brien pitched fine ball and was supported well.

JIM JEFFRIES TO REFEREE FIGHT

BY C. E. VAN LOAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 9.—This is the day of the man who says: "I told you so."

Late last night the word flashed along the line that Nolan had made some startling revelations regarding the "winner take all" and "side bets" clauses in the agreement between the fighters.

Perhaps he thought the disclosures would create public sympathy for him. Sporting men have long since given up trying to guess what Nolan thinks about anything. The popular suspicion grows that Nolan is unable to think at all.

Having entered into an agreement to pull the wool over the eyes of the public, and there is no doubt that Nolan was the very man who insisted on the split of the purse—Nelson's manager now tries to lay the blame on the Britt camp. The fact of the matter is that Nolan is totally discredited here, his word would not be taken under oath and its record stands against him. This is Nolan's last appearance in the limelight. He is mouthing his last few lines.

There is no excuse for the men who helped keep the matter a secret. Truth comes out sooner or later, and perhaps it is just as well in this case that the lines was put on the line before the fight itself. Few followers of the game ever believed the "winner take all" and "side bet" propositions. Nolan's statement only confirms a general suspicion.

It is settled that Jeffries will referee the big fight, and his name is the only thing that saves the situation. Great preparations have been made for the handling of a record-breaking crowd.

The arena is surrounded by a high barbed wire fence, and a strong guard will hold the crowd back. The rumor that there may be an attempt to rush the enclosure is not given credence.

Both men are in the best condition possible, and the lickerings of the past week have given rise to personal feelings in the matter. There can be no question that Nelson hates Britt with a deadly enmity, and Britt certainly has no love for the Dane. When the men come together there will be a fight in earnest, and there is a suspicion that Willie Britt and Nolan may hook up in an interesting little side show.

In this case a ticket on Willie will be a safe investment.

CONCORD CLUB HAS BENEFIT

CONCORD, N. H., Sept. 9.—In recognition of their gallant work throughout the season the members of the Concord New England League Baseball Club were tendered a complimentary field day at Rumford field.

In the afternoon the club gave a programme of sports and played a seven-inning ball game with the '03 Club of Penacook, a fine amateur organization. The leaguers won, 8 to 7.

The league players who won the field sports were: Sheets in the 100-yard dash, Kane the base running, Sacher the sack race, and Sheets and Hickman the three legged race. Sullivan threw a baseball 343 feet 9 inches.

CALDWELL WINS OVER STINSON

MANCHESTER, N. H., Sept. 9.—Harry Caldwell, of Manchester, defeated Stinson, of Chelsea, in a fifteen-mile motor-paced race at Manchester Coliseum, the contest containing the most sensational features that have been seen on the local track. During the first lap of the sixth mile, when the riders were speeding at almost record time, Caldwell's tire was punctured and he was thrown from the wheel to the inner edge of the track. He sustained a bruised elbow and a cut on the right thigh.

TIGERS' PROSPECTS NONE TOO BRIGHT

PRINCETON, N. J., Sept. 9. At the present time of the year baseball, tennis, yachting and kindred sports engage most of the attention, but only a brief space of time remains before the Autumn breezes will presage the season for football, and little town of Princeton, which has shown herself in quiet repose for three months, will awaken with the return into her midst of that characteristic one of the best sport loving college towns in the country.

Not more than two weeks will elapse before the candidates for this year's varsity team of "Old Nassau" will be called out by Captain Cooney and Trainer Jim Robinson, and success on Osbourne field for their first practice. Speculation is already as to whether the last season's victorious record can be duplicated. The chances at present are against such an outcome. The chief difficulty will be in finding players both in addition to and Short will be another man out of the line that will be extremely hard to replace. He was a strong, consistent player, and never failed to gain his required distance. Sinard, who played aggressively and who was responsible for more gains than any other man on the team, will not be eligible this Fall.

At present there is very little material of a slight that seems likely to prove valuable. The only men left in the line are center as tackle, Dillon as left guard and rocker at right end. It is useless to say much of the three stars, as they are without a peer on the gridiron. Princeton will suffer in the loss of Tomlinson, who as a starter back, who always proved a puzzle to the opposing teams; Ritter, the hard hitting left half back and quarter, who will of be able to play this Fall, and Walter Coulke, right half back. This leaves Hillyer the only old player in the back field. Helm, who gave promise of being the best quarter back in the country, will be missed, he having lost his life by drowning at Coney Island this Summer.

SUFFOLK VS. SPARRELL.

The base ball teams representing the Sparrell Print and the Suffolk Engraving & Electrotyping Co. will meet on the National League grounds this afternoon at 3:30 to play for the Printing Trades Championship of Boston. The Sparrell Print team have won nearly every game played this season, having been defeated only by the Suffolk team. This being the case, an interesting and well played game may be expected. Every one interested in Trade Championship ball should see this game.

FELTZ WILL MEET QUAKER

Tommy Feltz has been matched to meet Danny Dougherty of Philadelphia at Reading, Pa., on September 14, and later will meet either Hugh McGovern or Hoss O'Brien at the opening of the new club of Billy Bell's in Manchester, N. H., the last of the month.

CAPTAIN BILL TO READ WIRE

All the fight fans will be at the Hub Theatre, Dover and Washington streets, this afternoon to hear the fight returns of the Britt-Nelson battle by direct wire from the ringside.

Captain Bill Daly will, in his inimitable way, give the news to the fans as fast as the events take place in the ring, and Mish Murray has made all arrangements for the best service in the Hub.

WHY NOLAN OPPOSES JEFFRIES

BY BILLY NOLAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 9.—TO ALL FAIR LOVING FIGHT FANS AND PUBLIC IN GENERAL: As a final statement on the eve of the biggest boxing event of the century, I feel that it is but justice to myself and fair play with the public to give my full and final statement on to-day's forty-five-round battle between Nelson and Britt.

I will have at once the tedious weeks of weary and hard labor to clinch the match, which I sincerely believe will favor Battling Nelson.

Sacrifice is by no by-that the Britts worked hard to obtained Nelson, but were forced by public opinion to engage in the battle.

Chiefly one thing more stands to win, win, win, the referee question, which I consider more important than all, even the $100,000 in gate receipts.

I am willing for Nelson to accept any fair-minded, unbiased ring official with sufficient experience to guarantee not only Britt and Nelson a square deal, but one who has himself a reputation at stake.

This much I cannot feel for Jeffries. James J. Jeffries is a fighter, a champion, undoubtedly the greatest heavyweight that ever fought. He has judged one fight, a fished affair, where my ordinary boxer or referee could have acted. I do not believe that for a contest of importance like that between Nelson and Britt a referee with one experience should be experimented with.

Jeffries and Britt sometimes trained together. Britt on more than one occasion seconded Jeffries in the ring battles, and what appears the worst of all, Jeffries, after receiving a telegram from Willie Britt, which was signed by Billy Delaney, accepts the position and, with little urging, cuts his price in two.

Immediately the Britt money flows into the postrooms and my boy Nelson, who should prove a logical even money shot, is quoted at 10 to 7. Still worse, Jeffries arrives from Los Angeles and in a published interview challenges my right to have anything to say as to his acting as referee, even abuses me through the press, and is quoted that he does not care what Nolan says.

As an square, experienced man will do, Let them meet us half way and the match will surely take place readily.

BILLY NOLAN,
Manager for Battling Nelson.

YACHT PARADE ON SUNDAY

The annual rendezvous of the Yacht Racing Association of Massachusetts will be held Sunday afternoon in Hull Bay, off Boston Yacht Club. There will also be a marine parade and review at City Point.

LABOR GAMES AT CAMBRIDGE

The Cambridge Central Labor Union athletic events postponed from Labor Day will be held this afternoon at 2 o'clock at Cambridge Field, East Cambridge. No admission will be charged.

Nearly all the best athletes in and around Boston have entered for the games, which include a 100-yard dash, three-mile run, 440-yard run, 880-yard run, one-mile walk, relay race, tug of war, team race between the St. Alphonsus Association, St. Joseph's Athletic Association and Cambridge Gymnasium Independents. Gold and silver medals are offered as prizes in the 100-yard dash for boys under fifteen years of age, and good wags for a 100-yard run for girls under fifteen. A gold medal will be the first prize in a silver watch the second prize in the one-third-mile run for members of the Cambridge Central Labor Union.

At 2:30 there will be a baseball game between the St. John's Literary Institute and Roxburys for a prize of $50.

RETURNS AT OLD HOWARD.

At the Old Howard, beginning at 6 o'clock this evening, there will be direct returns by special wire from the ringside of the Britt-Nelson fight in San Francisco. The bulletins will be continuous and the service promises to be the best possible. The contest will be pictured in news dispatches as vividly as word painting can make it.

MILLIONAIRE'S WIFE WOULD BE HIS GUARDIAN

Mrs. Ransom C. Taylor of Worcester Says Husband Is Unfit to Handle Property.

MIND IS INFIRM, SHE SAYS

Special to the Boston American.

WORCESTER, Sept. 9.—Asserting that her husband, Ransom C. Taylor, known as "Front Street Taylor," the heaviest individual tax payer in Worcester and many times a millionaire, is suffering from advanced age and mental infirmities, Mrs. Mary S. Taylor has filed a petition in the Probate Court before Judge Forbes, asking that a conservator be appointed over him.

Mrs. Taylor asks that she or an equally competent person be appointed to handle the millionaire's property.

The announcement of Mrs. Taylor's petition to Judge Forbes created unusual surprise in Worcester's exclusive society.

For years the Taylors have been leaders in Worcester society. Mr. Taylor has been looked upon as Worcester's leading financier and real estate dealer. Because he owns nearly all of Front street, the nickname "Front Street Taylor," given him years ago, still sticks to him, and by that he is best known.

It would take columns to give a complete list of Mr. Taylor's real estate holdings. The largest business blocks in Worcester are owned by him. For the past three years he has paid over $60,000 annually in taxes. He has prided himself in being the heaviest tax payer in Worcester and has always been the first to pay his assessment.

Property in Many Cities.

The new Franklin Theatre in Franklin square was erected by Mr. Taylor three years ago. It is the handsomest theatre in Worcester. Not only does he own real estate in Worcester, but large properties in Brockton, Brookline, Newton, Wellesley and Boston. Among the best-known Boston blocks which Mr. Taylor holds shares in are the Lexington Hotel on Boylston street and the Colonial Theatre.

Mr. Taylor's office is at Harrington corner, Main street. So large is his personal estate that the entire time of himself and three sons is necessary to care for it. With him he has associated H. F. Willard '8 and Horace W. Taylor and a corps of bookkeepers.

Mr. Taylor's chief hobbies are diamonds and horses. For years Mr. Taylor has worn in his shirt front a diamond of many carats, which is considered one of the most valuable and perfect stones in New England. The diamond is valued by Mr. Taylor at $25,000.

One day about a month ago the venerable financier went to his office without the diamond. He did not seem to be the same man without it. Papers announced that the diamond was missing, and Chief W. J. E. Stone of the local police gasped when the news reached him that it would probably be up to him to locate it.

The services of the police were not needed, however, as it is said the family had taken the diamond from Mr. Taylor's shirt front so that he would not lose it. That was the first that the public knew that it was thought the financier's mind was failing.

Suits Against Taylor.

The Taylor family was brought into the time light about a year ago when suit for $25,000 was brought against the millionaire by his only daughter. The full nature of the suit was never known. It was settled out of court.

There is a suit against Mr. Taylor, brought by the L. P. Hollander Company of Boylston street, Boston. The Hollanders are suing for $10,000 for goods purchased at their store five months ago. Fannie C. Downing of Brookline has also brought suit against Willard S. Taylor, a son, for $800. It is alleged that young Taylor owes for dress goods purchased some time ago.

Hardly a horse race was ever pulled off in Worcester, or, in fact, any important meet elsewhere, that "Front Street Taylor" was not present. He is a great lover of fine horses. His stables have always been filled with a string of thoroughbreds.

During the Winter, when the Park avenue boulevard was in condition for racing, R. C. Taylor was always there, handling the ribbons behind a fast stepper.

TANNER HEAD OF GRAND ARMY

Well-Known New Yorker Made Leader—Next Encampment Is in Minneapolis.

DENVER, Col., Sept. 9.—Corporal James Tanner of New York has been elected commander-in-chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, which has just closed its thirty-ninth annual encampment here. The election was accompanied by a display of enthusiasm seldom equalled in the history of the Grand Army.

The other officers chosen are: George W. Cook, Peoria, senior vice-commander-in-chief; Silas H. Towler, Minneapolis, junior vice-commander-in-chief; Hugo P. Hiller, Waukesha, Wis., surgeon-general; Rev. Peter J. J. Lowry, Chapman, Kan., chaplain-in-chief.

Minneapolis was chosen as the place of the next encampment. The members of the council of administration include the following: Connecticut, V. G. McNeil, New Haven; Massachusetts, John W. Hersey, Springfield; Maine, George S. Smith, Houlton; New Hampshire, G. B. Woodbury, Concord; Rhode Island, Charles F. Brayton, Providence; Vermont, Daniel W. Davis, Chester.

Tanner was carried on the backs of his comrades to the platform when his election was announced. He made a short speech, thanking the delegates for the honor they had shown him. A telegram from President Roosevelt was read in which Mr. Roosevelt regretted his inability to attend the encampment and wished the Grand Army prosperity and long life.

The Woman's Relief Corps elected Mrs. Addie Adamis, of Superior, Neb., its national president. The election was full of excitement and genuine old-fashioned fighting. Miss Bertha Martin of Massilon, O., was elected president of the Daughters of Veterans. Miss Fannie T. Hazen, of Cambridge, Mass., was chosen head of the Army Nurses' Association.

POLITICS BECOMES FACTOR IN HACKETT MURDER CASE

People Indignant at Official Inactivity and Talk of Coming County Election.

By Clement L. Pollock.

READFIELD, Me., Sept. 9.—Politics has entered into the Mattie Hackett murder case. The residents of Readfield, as well as of Augusta, are indignant at the inaction of the officials. This indignation, it is confidently believed, will manifest itself at the next county election.

County Attorney Norman Leigh and Sheriff Frank Ham were told what took place about the Elmwood Hotel on the night of the murder. Then began a possession of practically all of the facts that they knew when their mouths were the world the name of Mrs. Elsie Hobbs Raymond in connection with the Kent's Hill crime.

The citizens of Readfield believe that the officers should have sent Bert Raymond and the brother who was with him that night long enough to get a complete story of what happened to them on Thursday night. This interview should have been exhaustive. The same proceeding should have taken place with regard to Mrs. Raymond.

Snubbed for Their Pains.

Entertaining the suspicion that they did against this family—suspicions that they have not changed yet so far as anybody knows—it was due to the residents of the county and to the suspected people themselves that this thing should be done.

But no action was taken. Residents of Readfield plead with certain of the county officials to do something and not dilly-dally until it was too late, and these residents, who have told me all about it, were snubbed for their pains.

Two weeks after the crime was committed Timothy Hartnett, who represents the Attorney-General of the State, took Bert Raymond into a room of the Elmwood Hotel, and he and Sheriff Frank Ham put him through a "third degree" examination. They found out nothing, practically, and the Sheriff admitted it the next day.

But that was two weeks after the crime had been committed. Every day after the murder Bert Raymond kept it discussed. He knew what evidence the officials had. He went into the room where he was to be put on the rack cool and collected. He came out the same way.

Nothing Being Done.

No work is being done on the case, Sheriff Frank Ham is busy with the Grand Jury. His deputy, Fred Jones, who has charge of this section of the country, is in attendance at the Grand Jury. What has become of Detective Hartnett nobody knows. If he is running down any clues, he is doing it on the quiet.

"The residents of Readfield do not want an arrest in the case," said Sheriff Ham to a representative of the BOSTON AMERICAN.

One thing may be put down as sure: The residents of Kennebec county do not want the officials to arrest anybody at this stage of the proceedings upon mere suspicion. But they cannot understand why three weeks have passed and there is nothing more than mere suspicion upon which to act.

In the meantime the parents of the murdered girl and the residents of Readfield and surrounding towns, who are terror stricken, want the matter cleared up. It is the firm belief of politicians of Augusta and other Kennebec County towns that the peculiar handling of this case in connection with the activity of the Sun's agents, who have swooped into this hallowed ground where their movements the officials, will put the county in the Democratic column at the next election.

THINK MISSING GIRL IN BOSTON

Parents of Pearl Ronnow, Ill, Wait and Hope for Her Return to Them.

Mr. John Ronnow, whose seventeen-year-old daughter Pearl left home three months ago because he scolded her, believes she has returned to Boston and is anxious to have her know that her parents await her return with loving arms.

Mr. and Mrs. Ronnow are Danes, and Pearl, who was born in Denmark, is their eldest child. When she left home she promised her mother she would write to her.

Five weeks ago Mrs. Ronnow received a letter from a friend of the family in Brooklyn saying that Pearl was there and had been for two weeks. The writer said that she was welcome to stay, but being a mother with a family of her own she desired to know why Pearl had left home.

Nothing more was heard of Pearl until Mrs. Ronnow's eye caught the heading of the story which related the visit of an unknown young man to police headquarters in Pemberton square, and his anxious inquiry whether the police had any record of the girl being missing.

Mr. Ronnow immediately started for Pemberton square. He was anxious to learn whether Pearl was in Boston. He wished her to know of the condition of things at home, feeling that if she knew she would lose no time in coming to them.

Mr. Ronnow has just come out of a hospital after a serious operation, and Mrs. Ronnow has not been well for two years.

DUMMY LOAN BY N. Y. LIFE

NEW YORK, Sept. 9.—A "dummy" loan of $2,325,000 by the New York Life Insurance Company, and the underwritings of syndicate agreements of life insurance and trust companies was brought out at the investigation of the company's affairs by the legislative life insurance investigating committee.

Officers of the New York Life Company testified that on one occasion it became necessary to sell certain securities in order to satisfy the Prussian Government.

Two clerks signed notes aggregating $2,325,000, and on the books the securities appeared as sold to these parties, although they really had been turned over to the New York Trust Company as security for the loan made on the notes of the two insurance companies "employes."

It was developed that since 1890 the New York Life Insurance Company had not been connected with trust companies, but subsequently it was admitted that the stock of the New York Trust Company is now held for the New York Life by a committee of trustees. The New York Trust Company is a consolidation of The New York Security & Trust Company and the Continental Trust Company.

An interesting feature of the day was the statement that Thomas W. Lawson of Boston might be called as a witness.

The committee's chairman, State Senator Armstrong, said if the information Mr. Lawson is supposed to hold could not be secured from other sources the Boston financier would be asked to testify. Not being a resident of the State Mr. Lawson cannot be compelled to give testimony.

AGED 80, KEPT BANK BOOKS IN POCKETS

NEW HAVEN, Sept. 9.—Patrick Corcoran, eighty years old, who has saved $14,775, which is deposited in a local bank, has been in the habit of carrying his bank books in his pocket, although sleeping in barns and out of the way places, and begging for shelter.

His relatives applied to the Probate Court for a conservator and a local lawyer was appointed in spite of the protests of the old man.

ROOSEVELT OUSTS PALMER

OYSTER BAY, N. Y., Sept. 9.—President Roosevelt summarily removed Frank W. Palmer by telegraph from the office of public printer, and directed him to turn over the government printing office to Foreman Ricketts, whom he has designated as acting public printer.

On Monday the President directed Mr. Palmer to send to him his resignation, to take effect on the 15th inst. At the same time he directed him not to take any further action in the cases of Oscar J. Ricketts, foreman of printing, and L. C. Hay, a division foreman in the government printing office, whose resignations Mr. Palmer had requested.

In direct disobedience of the President's instructions Mr. Palmer, on the 5th inst., notified Ricketts and Hay that the time which they might have in which to answer his charges would be extended until Saturday, the 9th inst.

HUMAN TORCH IN JAIL CELL

LYNN, Sept. 9.—Patrick Hayes was a human torch, illuminating the police station until the department was ready to turn in an alarm.

Hayes was locked up in a cell, and feeling very weary soon fell asleep. But the bench in his cell was hard and uncomfortable. He twisted and turned, trying to find a soft spot, until some matches in his pocket were ignited.

He awoke to find himself in flames. His shouts of "Fire!" and rattling the cell door turned out the entire force on duty at the station more quickly than they were ever aroused before.

While the other policemen were running back and forth in the cell room, Jailer Senter got the hose into action and Hayes was extinguished.

PEABODY MAN DIES 2D TIME

PEABODY, Sept. 9.—Harry Bartlett, who was saved from the grave by Undertaker Frank James, who had been called to embalm his body but who found the supposed dead man to be alive, is now believed to be dead. Physicians and an undertaker have examined his senseless body, and are positive that death has now come.

Bartlett was subject to fainting fits. While in one of these fits almost all animation was suspended. A physician had pronounced life extinct, the heart action being so slight it hardly could be noticed. The undertaker was about to inject the embalming fluid into the body when he saw the supposed dead man's eyelids move.

Tests upon the body now fail to bring any action. Although the undertaker and physicians are positive that life is extinct, the townspeople warn the family of E. H. Pierce, with whom Bartlett lived, against the undertaker taking that this second "death" is only another case of suspended animation.

NEW PAINLESS SURGERY AID

NEW YORK, Sept. 9.—A new and elaborate form of apparatus for the administration of anaesthetics in surgical operations was tested at St. Gregory's Hospital yesterday for the first time in this country.

With this apparatus nothing is left to chance or human fallibility. The machine is of French invention, devised by Doctors Roth, Draeger and Guglielmetti, and is in use in all the hospitals of Paris.

It uses oxygen in combination with either chloroform or ether, on the principle that the oxygen will maintain the heart action, often depressed by the anaesthetic and aid in quickly bringing the patient to consciousness after the operation.

From gravity to start drops of chloroform are necessary to produce a state of anaesthesia. This is followed by setting the surgeon can regulate the number of drops per minute into a tube.

Help Your Children To Form the Right Kind of Friendships

By Beatrice Fairfax

EVERY lover of nature knows how alert, vigilant and busy birds are during the time when nests are being built and when the young are being hatched and have to be fed and protected. During this period the parents are fully occupied—chirping, twittering and flying to and fro all day long.

Perhaps if we understood the mysteries of bird life we might find that some birds were good and some bad managers; that some nestlings were reared properly and taught how to trim their feathers, catch worms and hop about in approved style; and that some performed these duties in a slipshod, irregular way, and, as a consequence, got into difficulties. In either case, however, the inevitable end would be the same.

After a time the young birds would learn to fly and to shift for themselves, and then they would go off and build new nests, and would need their parents' care no more.

As it is with birds in the nest, so it is, to an extent, with men and women in the household. The busy time—the time for the exercise of household virtues and managing ways—is during the earlier years of life. In course of time the children grow up and settle, choose new friends, and finally take leave the home and start households on their own account.

Sometimes the changes thus brought about are very cruel. We are accustomed to speak of marriages as happy events; we put on gay attire for them, and smile and laugh about them; but we do not readily acknowledge, even to ourselves, how painful they often are.

It is a matter of experience, however, that marriages divide families as well as unite them together. They separate sisters and brothers, parents and children; and they introduce strangers into our familiar places—strangers who are not always congenial, who have to be endured and made the best of, because there they are, and we cannot put them aside.

Writers of fiction, generally take it for granted that brides and bridegrooms are the chief objects of interest in a household; they describe the joys and sorrows of some young couple, their difficulties and achievements, as if no one else were worth a thought.

Yet the former members of a household still exist, even though there has been a marriage in the family. While the bride is making mistakes it may be that the bridegroom's mother has a grief or sin for whom, while she had him, nothing could be too good—in the hands of an inexperienced young woman she is quite unequipped to arrange for his comfort and to supply his needs.

If his mother gives advice, as it is very natural and reasonable that she should do, she is supposed to be interfering and disagreeable.

On the other hand, the mother of a newly married daughter may see her child sinking at what is beyond her strength and trying to do work for which she is quite unfitted, with the idea of pleasing a husband or a husband's family who do not understand her powers; yet the mother must remain silent and watch, and whether to go on unchecked, for if she utters a word love will be the complaints about the doings of a "mother-in-law."

Therefore it behooves fathers and mothers to take more thought by way of preparation, to remember that sons and daughters who marry have interests of their own, and quietly help children to form friendships that will result in happiness for all concerned.

JACK HARKAWAY'S SON

A Story of Stirring Adventure, Afloat and Ashore.

By CAPTAIN RICHARD RUDD, Author of "WHO KILLED GERALD BROWN?"

YESTERDAY we left our young hero just as he was about to persuade the Captain of the ferryboat not to stop and let Hunston turn back. He had taken the first step toward capturing the arch-fiend, but he little knew what he was to encounter before his pledge was fulfilled.

CHAPTER XXIV.

On the Ferry.

JACK'S interview with the captain of the ferryboat was brief.

"Captain," he said, as he rushed breathlessly into the pilot house, "on your boat is the biggest scoundrel in New York. He pushed a man into the water. He will offer you large sums of money to put back. If you do it you will be adding a criminal to escape, and doing more mischief than you can possibly know."

"And who may you be with all this hot air?" said the captain in astonishment.

"It don't make any difference who I am," said Jack; "the main thing is for you to promise that you will not let that man get off the boat until a policeman meets it on the Jersey side."

The captain looked at him quizzically.

"Young fellow," he said, "you appear to me to be crazy, but sane or insane you can bet that I don't go back for nobody. If there's a high-toned crook below he stays there. See?"

Just at this minute the deckhand made his way into the pilot house, and began whispering violently to the captain.

"Huh," said the latter, aloud. "Then our young friend seems to be telling some truth. You say he is your friend in the automobile, Nels, that this boat only goes one way at a time, and the way she's going now happens to be west. If he's so anxious to get back to New York he can make the return trip with us, provided he rings off this yarn and pays his fare."

The deckhand again whispered, this time vehemently.

The captain's face grew purple.

Hunston Mad.

"No," he thundered, "I ain't rich by a blamed sight, but I ain't selling my honesty at any price that anybody could pay. If the man ain't straight we'll find out all about it when we get to Edgewater. If he is it won't make no more difference except to our young friend here, who'll likely get sent to the funny house."

Meanwhile there was plenty of excitement below.

When the deck hand failed to return from his errand for the captain refused to let him go below until the boat should reach the Jersey shore—Hunston grew frantic.

The boat kept her way westward.

Hunston had seen Jack. He knew he was trapped.

The man's resourcefulness and coolness seemed to have deserted him.

He cursed and swore at the deckhands for refusing to take his message to the captain, and even tried to go himself, but one of the steamboat men, thinking he was drunk, refused to permit him to leave the automobile.

When Jack returned to the main deck and took up his position at the west gate, Hunston grew livid with fury, but he addressed no word to Jack.

Such was the old man's excitement that Jack feared for some minutes that he might leap overboard and try to swim to shore, but he soon decided that Hunston had something with him in the automobile that he desired to guard as he would guard his life.

The vehicle was a large French car, and the passengers occupied the front seat.

In the back seat, which was covered over with a tarpaulin, was a bulky object, and from beneath the cover Jack thought he heard a low growl, repeated several times.

The Attack.

He was strengthened in this belief by the action of a horse attached to the only other vehicle on the ferry.

The animal had been uneasy since the auto car was stopped in front of him, and suddenly he began to snort and prance after the fashion of a domestic animal who beholds or scents some beast of prey.

The driver of the vehicle, which was a covered buggy, sprang to the floor and seized his horse's bit. He backed him until there was some distance between him and the automobile.

After that the horse became more quiet, but he still snorted and sniffed and looked with wide open eyes at the big car ahead of him.

The ferry boat had now entered the Edgewater slip, and Jack knew that his hour had come to act.

Before the gateman raised the barrier he jumped out a police whistle and blew it loudly.

A solitary policeman, waiting at the Jersey end of the ferry, ran down the slip.

At the same time Hunston, who had all the while kept the machinery of his automobile in motion, leaped down to the floor and the big machine gave a great bound toward the shore.

"Arrest that man!" yelled Jack to the policeman, at the same time laying hold of the back of the tonneau and climbing into the car.

"Why?" said the officer, his mouth agape.

"He's wanted by every cop in New York, that's why," said Jack, "and I've come to bring him back. Get him quick."

The machine had left the ferry with a leap and was thundering up the slip.

The policeman drew his revolver, but it was suddenly knocked from his hand.

A Capture.

Hunston leaned far over with a long club and had struck down the weapon.

At the same time the car took another wild leap and the vehicle ahead was barely over the officer, who had fallen beneath the car.

There was wild shouting from the ferry, police whistles blew and men came running out of their houses as the car sped up the sharp road in the distance, but Hunston never stopped to look back.

His companion in the car was busy with the machinery.

Hunston bent over the steering wheel, looking ahead in the glare of the search lights, and striking out into the open road which led up the cliff.

And Jack, saying nothing, but doing much thinking, crouched in the tonneau behind, unseen by either of the men in front of him.

As the automobile took the curves the pace was scarcely slackened.

The machine which would leave the road ledge and capsize, with death to everyone on board, seemed certain, but Hunston never took his foot off the pedal.

He was racing for his liberty now, and loss of liberty meant death.

Suddenly Jack heard something sing over his head, and a bullet plunged into the woodwork of the tonneau.

The next bullet was grazing on them.

Hunston looked over his shoulder just an instant, and in that instant caught sight of the boy.

But he knew it would do no good to stop the car now.

And Jack, although he was certain that in that last shot was written his death sentence, dared not leap.

Going at that speed, to leave the car would be instant death.

When they reached the top of the hill the machine shot rapidly down the road, leaving the trees behind them, indistinct lines blurred to the eyes.

They had gone perhaps ten blocks, when Hunston turned around, and suddenly pausing the wheel to his companion reached forth a powerful arm and grasped Jack by the collar.

He pulled him struggling but powerless over the front seat, and held him in a tigerlike grip.

"Aha, you rascal," he said, "Now we are going to find out how it feels to be thrown in front of an automobile running at forty miles an hour."

TO BE CONTINUED.

TO THE BOY READERS OF THE BOSTON AMERICAN:

TELL the truth. It is right. And even from the selfish point of view it is better, because it pays.

The boy who lies is a coward. All liars are cowards.

And no boy wants to be a coward.

TELL THE TRUTH.

Even when it seems as though you would save yourself trouble, or even punishment, don't lie. The truth is always better than a lie.

If you have done wrong, and fear the consequences, TELL THE TRUTH, no matter what happens. The boy who lies is always afraid of being found out. The lie makes him a coward, and fear of being found out will make him a sneak.

Don't be a COWARD or a SNEAK. TELL THE TRUTH.

ONE CHAPTER FROM A LITERARY COOK BOOK

HOW TO MAKE HASH

Recipes as They Might Be Written by Henry James, W. D. Howells, George Ade and Laura Jean Libbey

By Dorothy Dix

A CHICAGO man has discovered a long-felt want and is proceeding to fill it as only a Chicago man can.

His discovery consists of the fact that the reason women take so little interest in culinary matters is because cook books are written in a dull, commonplace and uninspiring style, not calculated to appeal to a cultivated lady of literary tastes.

To remedy this defect he is engaged in writing a literary cook book, after the style of our best authors, that he claims will be as fascinating as a novel, and that no woman, having once begun to read it, will put down until she has finished perusing the last page.

RECIPE FOR HASH AS HENRY JAMES
WOULD WRITE IT

MARIANNE had the passion for perfection, and as a maker of hash (though that is a mere detail) was absolutely supreme, unapproachable. To follow her (a being moving apart and touching the world only in rare moments) was to participate in the unforeseen—partake of her spiritual essence. To her society was under an obligation, which, to do it justice, it acknowledged by an attitude of freely florid and sanguinolent, she found her metier. This she attenuated, pantingly, endlessly. "How she does keep it up!" exclaimed those who observed her, wondering.

Eventually, mixed with shreds of onion (her parvenu tastes breaking through the fine veneer association had laid upon her like lacquer on a priceless Japanese cabinet), it was put to boil. The result was immense. "How did you do it?" I asked. The answer was vague, sibylline, with the very flavor of her elusive personality. "Ah," she replied, "how did I do it? If we only knew!"—and there you are.

RECIPE FOR HASH AS
MR. HOWELLS
WOULD WRITE IT.

MARIANNE and her mother faced each other at last, the narrow kitchen table between them.

An hour before, in the connubial privacy of her dressing room, the older woman had argued it out with her husband.

"Marianne is very shy," she had said to him.

"But why?" asked her husband.

"She does not deceive me," went on the woman.

"You mean——"

"Precisely that," exclaimed the woman, triumphing in her subtlety; "she is in love. She is thinking of getting married. Why else should she desire to learn how to make hash?"

It was this thought, carefully hidden, that turned Marianne's mother's face into a masque as they stood opposite each other. She yearned to ask the girl a thousand questions—if it was young Hopkins, if anything was arranged. Instead, she said:

"Take slices of cold beef——"

"Why not mutton?" inquired the girl, her mind filled with a sudden prescience. Her mother knew!

"Chop it up finely; add a slice or two of onion——"

"Ah!" the girl shuddered at the material world, closing in upon her. This, then, was the sordid reality to which love's young dream led.

The two women looked into each other's eyes. The veil was rent apart and they rushed into each other's arms.

That night at supper young Simpkins appeared.

"Marianne made the hash," said Marianne's mother. Young Simpkins took a mouthful.

"Did she, indeed?" he replied with an accent undefinable, unfathomable.

RECIPE FOR HASH AS
LAURA J. LIBBEY
WOULD WRITE IT

LADY MARIANNE tucked the tail of her white satin gown covered with priceless rose-point lace into her jewelled girdle and descended into the kitchen. A footman fetched her a bowl of scented water, in which she rinsed her lily white hands, and then, taking a silver bowl, richly carved in figures of Cupid playing with love, among the roses, she began to concoct a delectable compound, the formula for which was a secret that only Lady Montmorenci whispered with her dying breath to the most beautiful descendant of her proud race. From hidden drawers concealed behind gobelin tapestries Lady Marianne took the wings of humming birds, the tongues of nightingales, the brains of ospreys, and, seasoning them with spices from Araby so priceless a single drachm was worth a king's ransom, she added a gloss of liquefied ore of the vintage of 4745 B. C. and served the dish on a golden platter set with diamonds to Sir Arnold de Gravincourt, who had no sooner tasted it than he clasped her to his beating heart, and, murmuring passionate, burning words in her ear, swore that she should be his, though all the demons of Hades sought to prevent it.

RECIPE FOR HASH AS GEORGE ADE
WOULD WRITE IT

SAY, hash is like a conundrum. It's All to the Good when you are next to the Answer, but if it leaves you Guessing you Want to Pass it Up. The Hash Mother Used to Make has got a French Entree beat a City Block, but the Boarding House confection has got too Much Front to it. Its Character won't bear Investigation, and the Wise Guy gives it the Frozen Mitt when the Pompadoured Waitress wants to give him an Introduction to it.

Now, I'm not touting myself as a Chef, but here's the straight tip on how to make Hash that's the Real Bill of Lading, and no mistake.

Swipe some good, tender beef and do the Plutsimmons Pulverizing act on it with a Meat Chopper. Then get busy with a potato and an onion, put in a little pepper and salt and butter; souse in some water, put her on the stove and let her go Gallagher.

Sounds dead easy, doesn't it, Bo? But say—you've played one of those lead-pipe cinches that couldn't lose before, haven't you? That's the way with Hash. You never know how it is going to Turn Out until it has Turned, and then it's too Late, for I have noticed that an Amateur Cook is due to come in Same as another Decoration Time he Tries To Show Off that he has gotten Bouillon Savarin pulverized to a Pulp.

But say, Hash is Great Grub when it is Doped out Right, and any Pretty-soon-Now I am going to get on to the Secret that will stack up against it for Keeps and win out can have her Pick of the Marrying Bunch.

And that's on the level.

SCARLET LIES

By X and Z, Authors of "Married to Mystery"

CHAPTER CLVI.—Continued

SHE bent forward eagerly, trembling from head to foot with excitement. She forgot all else, forgot that she was speaking to a complete stranger, who, for aught she knew to the contrary, might be wholly unsympathetic, if not antagonistic. Indeed, there was every reason why she should be, for she had made all his name and inheritance for so long, should treasure bitter and unfriendly feelings for the man she loved above all other men on earth.

"Look here, Miss Armstrong," said George, turning in a nervous breath, "I think if you'll hold on and sit tight I'd better spin you the whole yarn from beginning to end as I heard it, and then we'll sort of understand each other better. Don't you see? Only never you be tempted for a moment to forget, my dear Miss Armstrong, that I'm his friend and your friend, too, if you are his."

The Right Sort.

"Thank you," she murmured, and held out her hand in mute gratitude.

He took it gently in his huge, hard hands, and shook it cheerily.

"You're the right sort," he said. "You haven't gone back on him, either. Ah, I somehow thought you hadn't, even though you've been and gone and got engaged to another man!"

Mary flushed hotly.

"I am no longer engaged to Captain Mendles," she said quietly. "But that does not matter to the question——"

"Mr. Holland, or whatever we like to call him—thinks you are, anyhow; and, well, I rather think he finds it a bitter pill to swallow. He's a fine chap, Miss Armstrong, and he doesn't show his feelings, as a rule. He is made of different stuff."

"That's what makes all the difference. Now, if I had been the man, Miss Armstrong——"

Hello! Well——" George paused. The pause was significant. "Well, all I can say," he added, very grimly, "it would be very different—very different indeed!"

"Don't!" murmured Mary, with a little gasp of fear. "No, no! you mustn't say that. You don't understand!"

"I only understand one thing, Miss Armstrong," George retorted. "Where a man and a woman are concerned, I can't see how anything can possibly alter their love. Why, take me, for instance. Do you suppose that if Bella were to be killed tomorrow it would make any difference to me? Should I run off, and, before, so to speak, her funeral parties are over, marry another woman? No!"

"I see you don't understand," she said, faintly.

"No, that I don't," answered George. "And I'm not married," she insisted.

To Bring Him Back.

"You're engaged, which is the next best thing."

"I am not even engaged," she persisted, "I have told you that there is now nothing between Captain Mendles and myself."

"Miss Armstrong," said George frankly, "all I can say is that I'm jolly glad to hear it—not because I have any personal feeling against Captain Mendles, not a bit of it, but because I think that it'll mean a lot to Stephen—Mr. Holland, I mean."

Tears glistened in the girl's eyes. She struggled hard to hide her feelings. It seemed almost too good to be true. Stephen was really alive! That was the only thing she could grasp. What mattered all the rest? What mattered anything?

She hardly heard what George was telling her, and he told her all there was to tell. She could not appreciate anything except just the one great fact that Stephen lived—that she knew where he was!

"What are you going to do about it?" asked George at length.

"Do?" she cried. "Why, bring him home!"

POINTERS ON PUTTING CLOTHING AWAY

THE manner in which clothes are put away has much to do with their preservation. Thus all coats, skirts, jackets and waterproofs should be supplied with loops by which they can be hung, so that they may not be suspended by the fabric. Nothing spoils a garment more than to have it bulged out in any part in consequence of its having been pushed over a hook.

Skirts should indeed be provided with three bands—one on the right side, one on the left, and one to hold up the drapery at the back. If this precaution be taken, it is much better to hang up a skirt than to fold it and lay it away. The best way to deal with good dresses is to hang them by their loops in large bags made of old sheets.

This preserves them from dust, and does not injure them. The bags should be made to button down the front, so that the dresses can be put in easily. The bows and bands should be stuffed out with paper.

Bags Are Useful

One reason why these bags are so useful is that they do away with all occasion for turning a dress inside out before hanging it; a very harmful process, because it makes creases, spoils trimmings, and tends to make a skirt lie flat—an appearance which quite takes away from its new look, and renders it very objectionable, but on taking a little pains they can usually be got rid of. Sometimes they disappear when a garment is hung before the fire for a while. When this plan fails they may be slightly dampened and ironed with a cool iron, paper or muslin being laid between the fabric and the iron.

One garment should never be hung over another on the same hook. To do this would take all the freshness out of the undermost garment, and it would not improve the one which lay uppermost.

Mantles, bodices and waistcoats should never be hung. They should be neatly folded, so as to keep them as straight and even as may be, and laid flat on a shelf. A piece of paper or muslin should be tucked over them to preserve them from dust.

Keep Separate

It is a mistake to keep Winter and Summer garments in the same place. A most important detail is the care of clothing is that at the close of each season the clothes diriion and occupy valuable room. Articles which have seen service, which are of no value should be sold as rubbish, or given away to those to whom they are likely to be useful.

Cotton and muslin dresses should never be put away with the starch in them. To do this would be likely to make them rot. They should be left rough dry, when it is to be starched that they should be worn for some time.

MILLIONAIRE ADOPTS ACTRESS WHO RESEMBLES HIS DEAD CHILD

Percita West Abandons a Stage Career to Console Sorrowing Parents.

PERCITA WEST.

ACTRESS ADOPTED BY MILLIONAIRE TAILOR.

Miss Percita West, lately leading woman for Robert Edeson and a great stage favorite in Boston, where she appeared in "Richelieu's Folly," and made not a few warm personal friends, has given up the stage to become the adopted daughter and heiress of Mr. and Mrs. De Wolf, a wealthy New York tailor. Her chance to leave the footlights to live in a fairy-tale home and be the petted child of Mr. and Mrs. De Wolf is due to her remarkable resemblance in face, figure and manner to a dead girl.

Miss West is the counterfeit presentment in the flesh of the daughter of the De Wolfs, a girl who died at the same age. When the one died, the parents were inconsolable. Then came several years, and their grief and woe think their only happiness lies in having in their home the young actress who looks, walks and talks so much like her.

It is said in Cleveland that Mrs. Berting Robinson-West, mother of the young actress, is there to think her daughter is going to abandon what may be a great theatrical career for domestic life. It is asserted in the West that the mother opposes the adoption.

When Mr. De Wolf was asked if this was true, he said to a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter:

"I do not attach any importance to any such statement regarding the feelings of Mrs. West. In her daughter I find the only beautiful person in the world who could take the place of my late lamented daughter. I have not legally adopted her, but in heart and soul she is my daughter and she will live with me as such.

"Miss West has been living with myself and wife as a daughter for the last six months. She called her father Mr. Dietrich, and we were friends, though we could not be considered chums. His wife was on the stage, he was a theatrical man, and his daughter adopted the profession, and everyone knows the remarkable success she achieved, not only as an actress, but because of her great beauty.

"The reason for the adoption of Miss West by me is that I had a daughter so nearly the same age as Miss West, who died shortly after I became acquainted with Mr. Dietrich and his wife, and her death was a great shock to us all. There was a remarkable resemblance between the two girls. I could not get over the death, and in the hope that the terrible affliction that had befallen me could be alleviated I set out to make Miss West my daughter."

MITCHELL and BAER

The Mutterings of New War

It is becoming quite evident that the Spring of 1906 is likely to witness a renewal of the struggle between the miners and the coal carrying railroads in the anthracite regions which was fought to a partial triumph for the miners in 1902.

President Mitchell of the United Mine Workers is laboring incessantly in the mining districts to build up his organization, which has fallen off in numbers and in resources during the years of peace.

He points to the suspiciously large heaps of coal which the operators are piling up as if in preparation for a period of non-production. He comments upon the refusal of the operators to state whether they will renew the present agreement at its expiration.

Disavowing any purpose of forcing a strike, he says that strikes, bad as they are, are less bad than "the evil of child-labor and serfdom."

And he winds up by begging that he may go into the expected negotiations with the operators supported by 150,000 miners, to demand the eight-hour day and recognition of the union.

If Mr. Mitchell's attitude seems somewhat threatening, it is quite paralleled by that of Mr. Baer—he of the "divine right"—who, following his strong bent for Biblical illustration, has been making speeches in the West, in one of which he said "Cain was the first striker. He killed Abel because Abel was the more prosperous."

Mr. Mitchell may seem to be unduly apprehensive of trouble. Mr. Baer seems to be singularly ready to furnish it.

The people of the United States, and particularly of the East, where hard, or anthracite, coal is almost exclusively used, have good reason to apprehend the clash of these two masterful forces. While they fight we shall suffer, as we did in the last contest.

Mitchell must expect to be attacked widely and fiercely for "stirring up strife." The chorus of denunciation of him has, indeed, begun already.

But the war of labor in an industry monopolized by a few employing corporations is real war. Its tactics are like those which open an armed conflict between nations.

Does Japan see Russia hurrying troops eastward over the Siberian railroad? Then Admiral Uriu runs into Port Arthur and sinks a few Russian cruisers.

Does England send a great fleet into the Baltic? Then Germany sends a greater.

Do Baer and his cubs begin to pile up coal about their mines while still keeping up the price to the consumer at famine figures? Then Mitchell calls on his men to organize and to put their pennies into a treasure chest which shall outlast the employers' mountains of coal.

It is fair strategy, good diplomacy, on both sides. Since the men who control employment in the anthracite region, those in whom, according to Mr. Baer, God in his wisdom vested control of the property rights of the land, have seen fit to establish relations of continued suspicion with their workmen, it is only to be expected that each side will watch the other narrowly, and judge each move as a hostile critic.

Much has been said and written about the evil of labor organizations. They have been charged with doing away with individual ambition, with fostering and fattening grafters, with fomenting industrial strife so that their officials might be busy and prosper.

Perhaps in instances some of these charges may have been justified. But what about employers' associations?

Mr. Baer is at the head of one which is notoriously illegal, and which, under an Attorney-General of the United States not tied neck and heels to the corporations, would now be fighting for its life before the courts.

The two strikes in the last score of years which have done the greatest injury to business and to the cause of organized labor were the American Railway Union—or Debs—strike of 1894, and the anthracite workers' strike of 1902.

The Debs strike has passed far into history. Argument concerning its justice or folly is flat, stale and unprofitable. It brought sorrow and suffering upon its participants; heavy loss upon the business interests of the nation.

And yet the nation seems to have learned no lesson from it.

The Coal Trust is more compactly organized and more insolent than the managers' association was. Mitchell's forces are more coherent than Debs's. The people sit complacently and watch these new armies organizing for new conflicts in other fields, and resignedly say, "Let the strongest win."

If there be nothing else to awaken something more than a "business" interest in the threatening situation in the anthracite fields, let us ask if this account of the child labor there—against which Mitchell proposes to strike—should not affect it?

The quotations are from an article in the current Outlook. First some figures as to the ages of the children:

The superintendent of the borough schools, after careful estimate of the conditions, gave the following as approximately the number of boys at present working in the coal breakers of the borough in violation of a law forbidding their employment under fourteen:

Nine years old	35
Ten years old	40
Eleven years old	40
Twelve years old	45

Now as to the conditions under which they work:

The only method by which one can become conscious of the experiences of these breaker boys is by participation. If the employment of little children in the breaker can be restricted, there will be slight difficulty in regulating the employment of children under proper age at other forms of mine labor.

On every hand are found bright boys and even grown youths, who are entirely illiterate. This is not surprising of the newly arrived immigrant, but it is difficult to suppress a feeling of resentment against a custom which brings you face to face with English and Welsh young men, eighteen or twenty years of age—not vagrants, but steady, industrious toilers—who cannot read a word of our language. The memory of one such stands out in striking relief. He is eighteen years old, and when asked to read a simple sentence said pathetically, "I can't read. I've worked in the coal mines every day for the past nine years."

Mr. Baer and his associates are responsible for this massacre of the minds and bodies of children. He and his may argue the question of wages—that is always a debatable point. They may oppose the eight-hour day—that's a matter of business economics, though in our opinion one that has but one side.

But to stunt the bodies and dwarf the minds of children, to take the light out of their lives and the intelligence out of their eyes, to destroy them as useful citizens, to make them less than "brothers to the ox"—is THAT the property right which the divinely selected men who own our deposits of coal?

The country will be foolish to permit another strike while this [illegible] people will not stand it.

William Redmond's Visit to Boston

(William Redmond, the Irish leader, comes to Boston next week to speak under the auspices of the United Irish League. In view of this fact the following article has been written especially for the Boston American.)

By Thomas B. Fitzpatrick,
Treasurer United Irish League.

WHAT is the meaning of Mr. Redmond's visit to Boston at this time? Is it to glory over the triumphs of a victory won, or to mourn over the saddening spectacle of a lost cause? No, the battle for a people's rights in which he and his brother, the Hon. John E. Redmond, leader of the Irish people and their associates in the Irish party, are so valiently engaged is not yet won, and these brave and true men are still girded with armor and pledged to the holy purpose of never taking it off until the triumph of their holy and patriotic mission will have been achieved.

Thank God he does not come here to mourn over a lost cause. A cause so humane, so responsible, so just, so patriotic, could not be lost while there is a spark of patriotism in an Irish heart, or a sense of justice in the liberty-loving people of the world who are conversant with Ireland's story.

Mr. Redmond comes to Boston to tell us that the battle is still on, and that there will be no wavering in the forefront or in the ranks until the victory will be won. He comes here encouraged by the splendid triumphs already made in support of home rule for Ireland, and the brighter prospects toward this end that the near future promises.

He is conscious that our American atmosphere is favorable to the cause of freedom and justice everywhere, and he knows that his plea for justice to Ireland will not fall upon deaf ears in any part of our fair land, and least of all in Boston.

It is a magnificent compliment to our American sense of justice that the representatives of great national reforms in other parts of the world come here to submit their cases before the jury of the American public. Recently the eyes of the civilized world have been turned toward the little city of Portsmouth, anxiously awaiting the verdict of the peace commissioners of Russia and Japan. To-day all Christendom is celebrating the jubilee of a peace restored to the two nations in conflict, and this peace is happily sanctified by the American environment that must ever be associated with it.

President Roosevelt is deluged with congratulations for the honorable part he has had in the matter, and the influence of American sentiment is regarded as a more potent factor by other nations than it ever was before.

Mr. Redmond comes to submit Ireland's case in the same atmosphere. He pleads for justice for his countrymen, to the end that peace and good will may exist between England and Ireland rather than enmity and distrust. I believe that his plea will be heard and his grand mission will be abundantly encouraged.

During my recent visit to Ireland I witnessed some of the results of this mission. In a short newspaper article it would be impossible to recount a fraction of the good accomplished through legislative reforms already gained in the interests of the Irish people. I may be permitted, however, to instance the enthusiasm with which the Land Purchase Act is regarded. In every part of Ireland it is looked upon as a measure pregnant with the greatest hope for the future.

I called upon two young Irish farmers in the County of Clare, who purchased their holdings through the act. "How do you like the plan?" said I. "How do we like the plan? How could we help liking it? We pay now less than two-thirds of what we paid before in rent, and by this process we are paying for our land and working for ourselves."

This simple man spoke words of wisdom. "We are now working for ourselves," said he. Here is the stimulus to personal thrift and the key to a nation's greatness.

Let us welcome to Boston the honored representative of a movement that has already accomplished this change and so many others for the betterment of the Irish people, and indulge the fond hope that some day, not in the distant future, we may be permitted to join with Mr. Redmond and his associates in celebrating the jubilee of peace and justice to Ireland.

Minister's Wives Fill Difficult Positions

By Caroline

THERE is no class of men who marry as young or as thoughtlessly as clergymen, and there is no class in the world who should consider the choice more deeply.

For the clergyman's wife has one of the hardest positions in the world to fill, and consequently it takes an unusual woman to fill it well. Everything is expected of her, but she must expect nothing. It is a give and take game, with the take left out.

She must succor the needy, aid the helpless and minister to the sick and dying.

She must dress simply (the most expensive style of dressing in the world) on a miserly salary.

She must entertain the parishioners in just the right way. Not more elaborately than they could entertain her (that would mean, "The minister's wife is SO extravagant"), but quite as well (or we would hear, "How strange it is they can't entertain better on the income they have").

She must be exceedingly tactful in her handling of people. She must be equally agreeable to all. No matter who is agreeable or disagreeable to her, she must always have ready the retort courteous. It won't do for her to give way to her petty feelings, for it reflects upon her husband. It makes him unpopular, and goodness knows he has a hard enough time without having to correct the mistakes made by his wife.

They are blows from the back which he has no right to expect.

No matter what has been her previous style of living she must adapt her ways to the community in which she resides, for what would be natural and correct in one community would look like an attempt to put on airs in another.

Dinner at 7, which is eminently proper in any of the cities of the East, would be quite out of place in a small town in the West, where every one eats his dinner in the middle of the day, and then has a simple supper at 6.

But last, and hardest struggle for the minister's wife, is to see her husband pursued and made the confidant of all the unmarried, as well as many of the married, women in the parish.

There are always three or four who wait to speak to him after service.

He is constantly called to the telephone by some woman who fancies that a few words from her clergyman are the only thing that will rouse her from the slough of despond.

Or he is stopped on the street by a woman, who thinks that a word from him will cure her husband of the drink habit, or another who is worried because her husband or lover seems wandering from the fold, or still another who tells the poor clergyman all her worries about the children. A clergyman's wife must get used to having her husband looked upon as public property.

In fact, she must get used to many unpleasant things, and take them with a smile. She must be patient, sympathetic, long suffering, kindly, thoughtful, unselfish. If she would be what the parishioners call a perfect minister's wife she must be an angel with all the womanly as well as the heavenly attributes, not forgetting that a few human and world traits would be in demand if she is to live in this workaday world, composed of beings singularly human in their makeup.

NOW WHAT D'YE THINK OF THAT?

I used to own a bee farm, And I really made it pay.

Until my bees, from a disease, Began to fade away.

I called the doctor in to learn If he could save their lives.

"Alas!" said he, quite hopelessly, "Your bees—they've all got hives!"
